

Maxxim Consulting announce major expansion in wake of 7days liquidation

19th October 2011

One of the UK's most dynamic and innovative consulting companies, Maxxim Consulting, are delighted to announce a number of senior level staffing appointments in a continued period of growth for the business.

Following the recent liquidation of 7days Limited, the London based consultancy have hired three senior consultants from their former competitor.

Ian Hunter, 48, who was an Associate Director at 7days will be joining Maxxim Consulting as a Partner focusing on organisation design, employee engagement, corporate restructuring and HR, finance and IT transformation.

Andy Nice, 34, who held the position of Principal Consultant for several years at 7days, will be joining Maxxim as Senior Engagement Manager, looking to develop organisation design, strategic change and cost reduction opportunities in media, retail and telco sectors.

Matt Keen, 36, who was a senior consultant at 7days, is an expert in retail, media, financial services and corporate restructuring. Matt is joining to support Maxxim's change, organisation design and HR practices.

Anna Simpson, 27, worked as a consultant at 7days, is joining Maxxim to focus on organisation design and development, organisational change, and employee engagement.

The new signings will join the existing team to work across a high profile client portfolio including The Royal Mail, Meggitt, Smiths Group, the Cabinet Office, Wolseley, the Prudential and Lancaster University. These latest appointments follow the hiring of Tim Ringo, former Vice President and Global Leader of IBM's human capital management consulting practice, who joined the consultancy as a partner earlier in the year.

Co - founder of Maxxim Consulting, Claire Arnold says, "I am delighted that such a strong team from one of our competitor organisations have decided to join Maxxim. Together they bring deep expertise that will both build on our own capabilities and provide an opportunity to break into new markets."

Ian Hunter, says "Maxxim is a strong and trusted brand. The professionalism and seniority of its team make it an attractive partner for those on the boards of major public and private sector institutions who are tasked with delivering excellent results in these turbulent times. I and my colleagues are delighted to have joined."
